

ANDREW'S TEAM CHARTER INDIVIDUAL QUESTIONNAIRE

PSYCHOLOGICAL SAFETY

1. What helps you feel more comfortable asking questions, giving your opinion, or voicing disagreement?

I'm more comfortable when the tone is positive and collaborative—when people acknowledge ideas and build on them rather than immediately critiquing. When others show enthusiasm or curiosity, it makes it much easier for me to jump in and contribute.

2. What makes you feel safer admitting mistakes or asking for help?

When others openly admit their own mistakes or uncertainties, it creates a norm that it's okay not to be perfect. Also, when responses are supportive and solution-focused rather than critical.

3. What causes you to shut down in group discussions? What makes you hesitate to contribute?

A lack of response or acknowledgment to ideas, overly critical feedback without any positive framing, or a cold/transactional tone can shut me down pretty quickly.

4. What makes you feel open when receiving constructive feedback? What makes you feel defensive instead?

I do better with feedback when it includes some recognition of effort or strengths and is framed as helping improve the work. I get more defensive when feedback feels purely negative, impersonal, or dismissive of the thought behind the idea.

5. What does healthy team accountability look like for you?

It's about supporting each other while still following through—checking in, offering help if someone is stuck, and addressing issues constructively without blame. Accountability should feel like we're all invested in each other's success.

EQUAL TALK TIME

1. What specific practices would help your team ensure all voices are heard?

- Round-robin sharing so everyone has a chance to speak
- Facilitator inviting quieter members to contribute
- Inviting everyone to build on and contribute to ideas before making decisions

2. How should the team handle situations where one person is dominating the discussion?

Gently and respectfully redirect. It shouldn't feel like shutting someone down, just balancing the conversation.

3. How should the team handle situations where one person is not speaking up at all?

Invite them in with encouragement, like, “Would love to hear your thoughts,” but without putting them on the spot. Creating a supportive tone makes it easier for them to jump in.

CLARITY

1. How do you prefer decisions to be made? (ex: consensus, lead makes final call, majority vote)

I prefer a collaborative approach where everyone has input, but there’s a clear decision-maker who makes the final call so we can move forward efficiently.

2. What types of ambiguity get in the way of your success on a team? (ex: unclear ownership of tasks, vague expectations, shifting deadlines)

- Unclear ownership of messaging or deliverables
- Vague expectations about what “good” looks like
- Changes in direction without explanation

3. What practices can your team implement to ensure clarity in the areas you identified in the previous question?

- Clearly define roles and ownership upfront
- Summarize decisions and next steps at the end of meetings
- Communicate changes along with the reasoning behind them

MEANING

1. How do you define success for your team?

Success is when we produce strong outcomes and have a positive, collaborative team experience—where people feel energized, valued, and proud of the work.

2. What helps you feel your work is meaningful?

Connecting what we’re doing to real people—users, customers, or internal stakeholders—and seeing how our work makes a difference. Also, being part of a team that values and appreciates contributions.

3. What practice(s) would help your team regularly refocus on your shared purpose?

- Regularly revisit the “why” behind our work
- Share impact, wins, and user feedback
- Celebrate milestones and contributions along the way

FINAL THOUGHTS

1. What are 2-3 communication norms you would like to see your team adopt?

- Acknowledge and build on each other's ideas
- Maintain a friendly, supportive, and respectful tone
- Give regular positive feedback and recognition

2. What is one practice your team MUST use for you to be successful?

A consistent practice of recognizing and appreciating contributions—whether in meetings or asynchronously—so people feel seen, valued, and motivated.
