

LINA'S TEAM CHARTER INDIVIDUAL QUESTIONNAIRE

PSYCHOLOGICAL SAFETY

1. What helps you feel more comfortable asking questions, giving your opinion, or voicing disagreement?

I feel the best when the tone is warm, respectful, and open. When people are patient, listen fully, and respond with empathy, it makes it easier for me to share my thoughts. I also appreciate when there's space in the conversation for different perspectives without pressure to agree immediately.

2. What makes you feel safer admitting mistakes or asking for help?

When people respond with understanding and reassurance rather than frustration. It helps when the team normalizes learning and growth and when others model vulnerability in a calm, non-judgmental way.

3. What causes you to shut down in group discussions? What makes you hesitate to contribute?

- Tension or conflict in the conversation
- Interruptions or talking over people
- Strong or abrupt disagreement without empathy
- Feeling like I might upset someone or create friction

4. What makes you feel open when receiving constructive feedback? What makes you feel defensive instead?

I'm open to feedback when it's delivered kindly and respectfully, with an understanding of the intent behind my work. I respond well when feedback feels collaborative.

I feel more defensive when:

- Feedback feels blunt or harsh
- It seems dismissive of the thought or care I put into something
- It's delivered in a tense or emotionally charged way

5. What does healthy team accountability look like for you?

Accountability should feel supportive and respectful. It's about helping each other stay on track while maintaining trust and positive relationships. Issues should be addressed calmly and constructively, without blame or tension.

EQUAL TALK TIME

1. What specific practices would help your team ensure all voices are heard?

- Creating intentional space for everyone to share
- Round-robin or gentle facilitation

- Allowing pauses so people can gather their thoughts
- Encouraging input in a supportive, non-pressuring way

2. How should the team handle situations where one person is dominating the discussion?

The facilitator can gently step in and redirect the conversation, making space for others in a respectful way. It's important that it doesn't feel confrontational.

3. How should the team handle situations where one person is not speaking up at all?

Invite them in gently, like "Would you like to share anything?" and make it clear it's okay to pass. Also, offering other ways to contribute (like follow-up messages) can help.

CLARITY

1. How do you prefer decisions to be made? (ex: consensus, lead makes final call, majority vote)

I'm comfortable with a collaborative approach where everyone has input, even if one person makes the final decision. It's important to me that perspectives are heard and considered before decisions are made.

2. What types of ambiguity get in the way of your success on a team? (ex: unclear ownership of tasks, vague expectations, shifting deadlines)

- Unclear expectations around what's needed from me
- Not knowing whether my input is wanted or valued
- Decisions being made without discussion

3. What practices can your team implement to ensure clarity in the areas you identified in the previous question?

- Clearly invite input from all roles before decisions
- Define expectations and roles upfront
- Summarize decisions and confirm understanding

MEANING

1. How do you define success for your team?

For me, success means creating something meaningful together and maintaining strong, positive relationships. I value both the outcome and how we work together to get there.

2. What helps you feel your work is meaningful?

- Knowing that my perspective is heard and considered
- Understanding how the work impacts users
- Feeling like I'm contributing to something collaborative and thoughtful

3. What practice(s) would help your team regularly refocus on your shared purpose?

- Regularly connect decisions back to user needs
- Talk through the “why” behind our work
- Create space to reflect on what we’re building together

FINAL THOUGHTS

1. What are 2-3 communication norms you would like to see your team adopt?

- Speak respectfully and with empathy
- Avoid interrupting and allow people to finish their thoughts
- Approach differences with curiosity rather than tension

2. What is one practice your team MUST use for you to be successful?

A consistent commitment to respectful, empathetic communication where people feel safe sharing openly without fear of causing conflict.
