

RAJ'S TEAM CHARTER INDIVIDUAL QUESTIONNAIRE

PSYCHOLOGICAL SAFETY

1. What helps you feel more comfortable asking questions, giving your opinion, or voicing disagreement?

I'm comfortable speaking up in most situations, especially when the discussion is focused and efficient. I value an environment where people can be direct, challenge ideas, and move toward decisions without overcomplicating things.

2. What makes you feel safer admitting mistakes or asking for help?

A team that focuses on fixing problems quickly rather than dwelling on them. If mistakes are addressed with a "what's the solution?" mindset, I'm comfortable being upfront.

3. What causes you to shut down in group discussions? What makes you hesitate to contribute?

- Long, unfocused discussions
- Hesitation or lack of clarity
- Overly emotional or indirect communication
- Repeating the same points without progress

4. What makes you feel open when receiving constructive feedback? What makes you feel defensive instead?

I'm open to feedback when it's:

- Direct, specific, and actionable
- Focused on improving results

I get frustrated when:

- Feedback is vague or overly softened
- It avoids the real issue
- It slows down progress without clear benefit

5. What does healthy team accountability look like for you?

Clear expectations, ownership, and follow-through. People do what they say they'll do, and if something slips, it's addressed quickly and directly. Accountability means results, not excuses.

EQUAL TALK TIME

1. What specific practices would help your team ensure all voices are heard?

- Structured input (quick round-robin if needed)
- Time-boxed discussions
- Clear agendas to keep things focused

2. How should the team handle situations where one person is dominating the discussion?

Cut in and redirect. Keep it respectful but firm—"Let's move on" or "We need to hear from others."

3. How should the team handle situations where one person is not speaking up at all?

Ask directly for input. If they don't have anything to add, move on. Not everyone needs to speak on every topic, but key stakeholders should weigh in when it matters.

CLARITY

1. How do you prefer decisions to be made? (ex: consensus, lead makes final call, majority vote)

Consult the team, then make a clear decision and move forward. Not every decision needs consensus—speed matters.

2. What types of ambiguity get in the way of your success on a team? (ex: unclear ownership of tasks, vague expectations, shifting deadlines)

- Unclear ownership
- Undefined deadlines
- Lack of priorities
- Ongoing debate without decision

3. What practices can your team implement to ensure clarity in the areas you identified in the previous question?

- Assign clear owners and deadlines for every task
- Define priorities and stick to them
- Summarize decisions and next steps immediately

MEANING

1. How do you define success for your team?

Delivering results on time and meeting objectives. A successful team executes well, stays on track, and produces outcomes that meet expectations.

2. What helps you feel your work is meaningful?

Making progress and hitting milestones. Seeing tangible results and forward momentum is what makes the work feel worthwhile.

3. What practice(s) would help your team regularly refocus on your shared purpose?

- Set clear goals and milestones
- Track progress visibly
- Regularly review what's been completed vs. what's next

FINAL THOUGHTS

1. What are 2-3 communication norms you would like to see your team adopt?

- Be direct and concise
- Stay focused and on topic
- Communicate issues early and clearly

2. What is one practice your team MUST use for you to be successful?

Clear ownership and accountability for tasks, with consistent follow-through on deadlines and commitments.
